

MERCHANT HEDGING INDEX

The Merchant Hedging Index is defined by the Energy Act (No. 458/2000 Coll.) in Section 2, Paragraph 1, Letter k) as the percentage share of the quantity of electricity or gas for which the trader has contractually secured supply at a fixed price or a variable price which, in connection with financial settlement, ensures a fixed price level for the following 36 months for consumers and self-employed natural persons, in relation to the anticipated quantity of electricity or gas that is to be delivered in this period to those customers to whom the electricity or gas trader supplies electricity or gas under a contract with a fixed price for the supply of electricity or gas for the agreed duration of the contractual obligation.

Through this indicator, the trader publicly declares the extent to which it has secured in advance the supplies of electricity or gas to cover the expected consumption of its customers with fixed-price contracts for a definite term in the next three years, thereby expressing, in relation to customers, the level of reliability.

If the value of the index exceeds 70% (this is considered a safe value), it is sufficient under the law to indicate, instead of the specific value, the information that this value is higher than 70%. Pursuant to Section 30, Paragraph 2, Letter s) and Section 61, Paragraph 2, Letter q) of the Energy Act, traders are obliged to publish the value of the index twice a year, namely as of 31 March and 30 September.

On the basis of the above-mentioned obligation, Bonett Energie a.s. hereby declares that:

The value of the Merchant Hedging Index as of 31 March 2026 is:

- for electricity higher than 70%
- for gas higher than 70%
